STORYTELLING FOR THE DIGITAL AGE

Specialized Study Program in Mobile Digital Filmmaking

Digital storytelling doesn't have to be complicated or for the tech-savvy. Using basic filmmaking concepts and vocabulary and strategic production lessons, your students can practice essential skills for their future while you still meet Common Core Standards.

Give yourself an introduction to filmmaking basics as they apply to education. Understand how video production and storytelling can be integrated across your curriculum to teach critical thinking and analytical skills, problem solving, interpersonal skills, and more. Learn how "The Door Scene" can be used to teach the five steps of the video production process and how video production and writing synthesize. Delve into two other production challenges that you can use to show students camera techniques regarding movement, perspective, and composition. Your students can expand on their creativity while still learning using this nontraditional educational project.
